Fashion icon, socialite Gloria Vanderbilt dead at 95

Her death was confirmed by her son, CNN anchor Anderson Cooper.

Gloria Vanderbilt, the “poor little rich girl” who lived a life at the highest levels of fashion, society and wealth as an heir to one of the greatest family fortunes in U.S. history, died on Monday at the age of 95, her son, CNN correspondent Anderson Cooper, said.

Vanderbilt became a fashion icon in the 1970s with an eponymous line of tight-fitting blue jeans that bore her signature and trademark swan logo. They were a must-have for any woman with aspirations to style.

Vanderbilt wrote that as a girl she had considered becoming a nun, which would have been an incredible loss to the chroniclers of high society, celebrity and tumult. Instead of a nunnery, she went on to a life that could have provided story lines for dozens of soap operas, romance novels, Broadway musicals and tear-jerker movies.

Vanderbilt was born into wealth on Feb. 20, 1924, in New York City. She was the great-great-granddaughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt, the 19th-century railroad and shipping magnate who amassed one of the greatest fortunes of the time.

She was not yet 2 years old when her father, Reginald Claypoole Vanderbilt, died and she spent many of the following years living in Europe with her mother, Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, on her trust fund, which was estimated at $2.5 million — the equivalent of at least $33 million today.

Gloria's aunt, Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney, who founded the Whitney Museum of American Art, said Gloria's mother was misusing the trust fund on a free-wheeling lifestyle that included a female lover, and went to court. Whitney won custody of the child in an acrimonious, sensationalized case that eventually reached the U.S. Supreme Court.

The custody battle featured high-society character witnesses for both sides and testimony so sensitive that courtroom spectators were barred at times. The public closely followed the fate of “Little Gloria,” who was protected at the time by 12 bodyguards.

Whitney eventually won custody of Gloria with one judge reproaching the girl's mother for living a lifestyle that was “calculated to destroy her health and neglectful of her moral, spiritual and mental education.”

Vanderbilt said being taken from her mother started her on a lifelong quest for love and approval. This led her to marry a 32-year-old Hollywood agent, Pat DiCicco, when she was only 17. They divorced in 1945, when at the age of 21, Vanderbilt married conductor Leopold Stokowski, who was 63.

The couple had two sons and by the time they separated in 1955, Vanderbilt was being seen around New York with singer Frank Sinatra. After another divorce, Vanderbilt found herself in another custody fight — this time with Stokowski claiming that she was an unfit mother who spent too much time in psychotherapy.

From 1956 to

1963, Vanderbilt was married to Sidney Lumet, director of the acclaimed films “12 Angry Men,” “Dog Day Afternoon,” “Serpico” and “Network.”

She was married to her fourth husband, writer Wyatt Cooper, until his death during heart surgery in 1978. They had two sons, Anderson and Carter.

In 1988, in the greatest tragedy of Vanderbilt's life, Carter, aged 23, killed himself by jumping from the family's 14th-floor apartment in New York, in spite of his mother's attempts to stop him.

She later wrote a memoir, “A Mother's Story,” in which she reflected on her own painful upbringing and blamed Carter's suicide on psychosis brought on by an anti-asthma drug.

Vanderbilt called her son's death “the final loss, the fatal loss that stripped me bare,” and said she did not think she could survive it.

In a 2012 television interview with her son Anderson, she said she thought about the tragedy every day and that she had considered jumping after her son.

“There was a moment when I thought I was going to jump after him but then I thought of you ... and it stopped me from doing that,” she told Anderson. REUTERS

Megadeth's Mustaine diagnosed with throat cancer

2 Dave Mustaine, lead singer and guitarist for the heavy metal band Megadeth, has been diagnosed with throat cancer, forcing the band to cancel most of its 2019 shows, he said on Monday. Megadeth had been scheduled to perform this year in Milwaukee, Las Vegas, Buenos Aires and other cities in North and South America. “I'm working closely with my doctors, and we've mapped out a treatment plan which they feel has a 90 percent success rate,” Mustaine said in a statement on Facebook. “Treatment has already begun.” Megadeth, which was formed in 1983 and helped pioneer a style called thrash metal, reached the height of its popularity in the late 1980s and 1990s with albums such as “Countdown to Extinction” and “Youthanasia.” Mustaine is known for his shredding, a fast style of rock lead guitar playing. ## US to add troops to Middle East as Iran plans breach

3 Iran said on Monday it would soon breach limits on how much enriched uranium it can stockpile under a 2015 agreement rejected by the United States, in a new point of contention with Washington which accused Tehran of “nuclear blackmail.” Tensions between Iran and the U.S. are rising more than a year after President Donald Trump announced Washington was withdrawing from the nuclear deal. Fears of a confrontation have mounted since last Thursday, when two oil tankers in the Gulf were attacked. The U.S. military on Monday released images that it says show Iran's Revolutionary Guard removing an unexploded limpet mine from one of the tankers. Two U.S. officials speaking on condition of anonymity told Reuters on Monday it's preparing to send additional troops to the Middle East in response to mounting concerns over Iran. REUTERS

Raptors' NBA victory parade marred by shooting

4 Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and some 2 million other fans cheered the NBA champion Toronto Raptors on Monday in a victory celebration that united the nation, but the party was marred by a shooting that seriously wounded two people. Five double-decker buses that carried the players and their families moved along the parade route at a snail's pace due to the massive crowd, as players including Kawhi

Leonard, who was named MVP of the NBA Finals, sprayed champagne on the fans. The Canadian musician Drake, one of the team's most prominent and outspoken fans, earned a place on one of the buses. The convoy arrived nearly two hours behind schedule near Toronto's City Hall, where the team was greeted on a stage by Trudeau and other dignitaries. The shooting interrupted an otherwise peaceful, six-hour bash. REUTERS

Abortion-access bill draws big crowds to State House

Crowds on both sides wearing pink and red filled the State House.

It's been held up as a bulwark against the conservative forces determined to overturn Roe v. Wade and decried as an opening to legalized "infanticide."

Supporters of the bill say access to abortion in Massachusetts needs to be protected against the whims of the courts, while opponents argue that the health and safety of women and teenagers will be put in jeopardy.

Even the ice cream chain JP Licks got involved to support the ROE Act, while former U.S. Attorney Frank McNamara compared backers to "Y2K fearmongers" who warned, wrongly, that computer systems were unprepared to transition to the new millennium.

The emotionally charged debate over abortion overtook the State House on Monday where pro-life and pro-choice activists and lawmakers battled over an expansive abortion-rights bill that would allow for abortions later in pregnancy.

Crowds on both sides of the issue, wearing pink in support or red in opposition, swarmed the State House, filling the auditorium where the Judiciary Committee was taking testimony and spilling into two overflow areas.

Attorney General Maura Healey and U.S. Rep. Lori Trahan were among the supporters who showed up to testify in support of the bill, which backers said would stop women from having to travel out of state for an abortion if they learn late in pregnancy that the fetus won't survive.

The bill, known as the ROE Act, would allow for abortions after 24 weeks to protect the physical or mental health of a patient, or in cases of diagnosed lethal fetal anomalies. The legislation would also get rid of parental consent requirements for teenagers that supporters said could be an impediment for a small number of teenagers who are uncomfortable seeking the help of a parent or guardian.

Less than 2 percent of the 18,256 abortions performed in Massachusetts in 2018 were for minors, and 77 percent of those young women had parental consent, according to bill sponsors.

"Abortion is health care and health care is a human right," said Carol Rose, executive director of the ACLU of Massachusetts. "Women will not be equal members of society until we have full access to reproductive health care and full autonomy over our bodies."

Critics, however, warned that the bill (H 3320) would throw the doors wide open for abortions to be performed for any reason, and remove protections of patients, such as one that would no longer require an abortion after 24 weeks to take place in a hospital.

"We are pro-life from the womb to the tomb," said Eugene Rivers, a Boston activist and Pentecostal minister, who helped rally pro-life advocates outside the State House in the morning.

The fight over abortion rights in Massachusetts is taking place at a time when pro-life activists have scored a series of wins in more conservative-leaning states to curtail access. Advocates for choice believe the constitutional right to an abortion could be in jeopardy due to changes in the makeup of the Supreme Court, and want to make sure that Massachusetts protects it as a state right. # Harvard revokes Parkland shooting survivor's acceptance over racial slurs

Harvard University has rescinded its admission offer to a survivor of the 2018 massacre at a Florida high school over his past use of racial slurs in an online document posted on Twitter, the student said on Monday.

The student, Kyle Kashuv, was a junior at Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, when a gunman opened fire in February 2018 and killed 17 students and staff. He became the target of online criticism last month after images of a shared study guide from more than a year ago circulated on Twitter, showing he wrote anti-black slurs.

"A few weeks ago, I was made aware of egregious and callous comments classmates and I made privately years ago — when I was 16 years old, months before the shooting — in an attempt to be as extreme and shocking as possible. I immediately apologized," Kashuv wrote on Twitter on Monday.

Kashuv said on Twitter that he had submitted a written apology to Harvard after the school contacted him asking him to explain the statements he made in the Google document. In response, he said, he received a letter from the admissions dean saying that his acceptance had been revoked.

"The Committee takes seriously the qualities of maturity and moral character. After careful consideration the Committee voted to rescind your admission to Harvard College," Harvard Admissions Dean William Fitzsimmons wrote to Kashuv on June 3, according to a copy of the letter that Kashuv posted on Twitter.

A representative for Harvard declined to comment on the matter, citing a policy to not comment publicly on the admission status of individual applicants.

Kashuv, who distinguished himself from other Parkland students as a gun-rights advocate after the school shooting, said on Twitter that he had requested to meet with the admissions committee to discuss the matter in person, but Harvard denied his request. REUTERS

Earn a competitive salary with these environmental degrees

patrick.king@metro.us

Finding a major that can help you make a difference in the world while actually providing some sort of job security once you graduate can be a difficult decision. It's a sobering realization to find out that your passions may not always pay the bills and that following the rule of supply and demand can be a sure bet toward financial stability. But, did you know that finding green jobs that aim to help the environment can offer attractive salaries to compensate for your meaningful work?

According to recent studies from the U.S. Bureau of Labor and Statistics, many popular environmental-protection positions either hovered around the national median salary of $38,640 in 2018 or well above that number. Jobs such as environmental science and protection technicians, environmental engineers, ing technicians, conservation scientists, and soil and plant scientists all have salaries slightly over the national median. Environmental scientists, environmental engineers, and hydrologists all have higher salaries, with the highest-paid position, atmospheric and space scientists, earning an average salary of $94,110 a year.

Here are some affordable schools in the area that provide programs that can help you jump into careers in the environmental-protection industry.

Boston College

The Earth and Environmental Sciences program at Boston College's Morrissey College of Arts and Sciences is one of the best local programs to work within environmental science, environmental studies, environmental policy, resource management, environmental law or similar fields that could benefit the planet. These courses of study could give you the opportunity to work in research of changes in the world's atmosphere and even help you find a job within either governmental agencies or industry to analyze pollution problems that could affect the future.

Williams College

This historic school in Williamstown, Massachusetts, was No. 1 in U.S. News' 2019 annual ranking of Best National Liberal Arts Colleges. With such areas of study as Environmental Economics, Urban Environmental Studies, Environmental Planning, as well as Sustainable Agriculture, the school offers a well-rounded curriculum that can help students pick useful concentrations within the field. While students will also gain an understanding of the challenges our planet is currently facing, they will also be able to form an understanding of how to change harmful governmental policies.

Walter Parkes and Laurie MacDonald on their long journey to make 'Men in Black: International'

"Men in Black" producers Walter Parkes and Laurie MacDonald were in no rush to make a fourth installment to the franchise.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Everyone involved in the previous films, which starred Will Smith and grossed a combined total of $1.65 billion, felt the 2012 sci-fi comedy had brought the story to an end and had moved on. But Parkes and MacDonald had a germ of an idea for a new "Men in Black" film that had always intrigued them.

"We had this basic idea of a young girl who witnesses or has an experience with an alien and who spends the rest of her youth trying to find [the] 'men in black,' talks her way in, is paired with the wrong partner and realizes that there's more to the universe than science," Parkes recently told Metro over the phone.

However, the pair weren't able to get the script right. Which is when Phil Lord and Chris Miller approached the duo about crossing "Men in Black" with "21 Jump Street." The producers fully supported this plan, as they thought it "sounded fun." Once again, though, this crossover succumbed due to script problems.

"In retrospect, I don't think it was an accident," explains Parkes. "I think the two franchises are in some ways opposite. 'Men in Black' is about playing extraordinary situations in a sort of comically deadpan style, whereas 'Jump Street' is going after more mainstream-genre moments and then going way over the top with them."

With that version dead, MacDonald and Parkes returned to their original plan, and were relieved when Art Marcum and Matt Holloway delivered a script that they adored. But since this was a reboot, the duo were well aware that finding an actor to step into Will Smith's shoes was going to be incredibly difficult.

"'Men in Black' is about playing extraordinary situations in a sort of comically deadpan style."

Walter Parkes

"It was so tough to find our H," admits MacDonald. "Because there are so few actors who can play the tough action, who have the physical prowess, a pure charisma and great comic instinct. There's not a long list."

Which is why it was such a relief when Chris Hemsworth, who was the first actor they approached for the role, immediately signed up. Casting Agent M was all set up to be just as difficult, too, but it became a lot easier when Parkes and MacDonald saw Tessa Thompson acting opposite Hemsworth in "Thor: Ragnarok" and were enchanted by their chemistry. Although, MacDonald is the first to admit they were a little concerned that pairing the two together again so quickly after "Ragnarok" might look a tad "unimaginative."

Thompson and Hemsworth aren't the only huge changes that "International" makes to the "Men in Black" franchise. As its title makes clear, the setting for the film has moved away from New York, and while Hemsworth and Thompson's agents are based in London, France, Italy and Morocco feature prominently, too.

"The idea of opening this up internationally has always in the back of our minds," says Parkes. "But it was quite liberating creatively, and I do think it also made the studio confident enough to green-light the movie. Because they felt it would hopefully appeal to this rapidly expanding global market."

'Music is always developing' MARTIN GARRIX

The Dutch DJ talked with Metro about his song "Summer Days" and the climax Latin genres are currently living.

PATRICIA CARRANZA, MWN
letters@metro.us

For the third year in a row, Martin Garrix has been considered the best disc jockey, according to DJ Mag's Top 100 list. And 2019 could bring the 23-year-old another title thanks to his latest release, which could also become the best song of this summer. "Summer Days," featuring American rapper Macklemore and singer Patrick Stump of Fall Out Boy, has already managed to gather more than 17 million views on YouTube.

How did the collaboration with Patrick Stump and Macklemore come about?

It was the first time I worked with both of them. I wanted to work with them for a long time and I approached them because I felt I had the perfect song. It made me very happy that both were excited to collaborate.

Tell about the creative process of "Summer Days."

I sent the idea to Macklemore and Patrick, [they] both recorded their verses and gave their own touch. In fact, we finished the song shortly after. It was a quick process.

At your age you are one of the most important DJs in the world. How does that feel?

Very grateful. Everything has happened quite fast for me, but I have worked very hard to achieve this.

You have collaborated with great musicians such as Dua Lipa and Khalid, among others. Was that the key to reach more people?

Of course, music has a greater scope when you collaborate with other artists. And it also helps them reach other audiences. I love collaborating because we learn from each other by creating something new together.

Do you think that electronic music is going through good times?

Music is always developing and changing and there are different trends. It is currently happening with Latin music. As for electronic music, I think it still works very well and has developed a lot around the world.

Would you like to collaborate with someone doing Latin music?

I like all kinds of music and I think that Latin music is great. At the moment I am not working with anyone on that, but I am open to any proposal.

What do you enjoy most when you are on stage?

Making people happy. When people dance, they are always happy and forget everything else for that moment.

What does a DJ need to be successful around the world?

Work hard and always be nice to everyone!

SPORTS

Ranking Boston teams on which franchise will win the city's next title.

matthew.burke@metro.us

The old-school, woe-is-me, glass-half-full Boston sports fan will look at the current Boston sports climate as follows.

The Bruins' core is too old and they missed their chance to win a title with Tuukka Rask in goal with their Game 7 loss last week. The Celtics missed their window in being able to acquire Anthony Davis and might as well just go with a full youth movement now. The Red Sox caught lightning in a bottle with first-year manager Alex Cora last year, but the honeymoon is very much over as they are looking up at both the Yankees and Rays in the AL East standings. And the Patriots, with soon-to-be 42-year-old quarterback Tom Brady, are due to finally decline.

So, did the Blues' victory at TD Garden last week signal the beginning of the end for Boston sports dominance?

Highly unlikely. The infrastructure within all four franchises is exceptionally strong, and the good money says that at least one of these teams will be raising a trophy within the next year or two.

Here, we will rank the Boston sports teams, top to bottom, in terms of which team is most likely to win a title next.

1. Patriots

Ah, the old reliable Patriots.

Until Brady or Bill Belichick retires, the Pats are a lock to make the NFL playoffs. They haven't missed the postseason since 2008, when Brady missed 15.5 games. They have made the last eight AFC Championship games, and have made the last three Super Bowls.

On top of the mountain of history that they have already made, the Pats could create even more of a legacy for themselves if they were to make their fourth straight Super Bowl next winter. Only one franchise has made four straight Super Bowls, and that was the early-1990s Buffalo Bills. Of course, those Bills went 0-4 in the big game. The Pats already have two wins under their belts in their past three trips.

The Patriots once again knocking on the door for a championship in 2019-20 looks to be the safest bet in sports for another year. While the team lost Rob Gronkowski to retirement, they added a first-round draft pick at receiver in N'Keal Harry, beefed up on the defensive line with the addition of Michael Bennett and veterans Jamie Collins, Demaryius Thomas and Benjamin Watson. One would think that at least one of those three vets will be a big contributor to another lengthy Patriots run.

2. Celtics

Didn't think you'd see the C's here, did you?

The Celtics were the red-headed stepchild of the Boston sports scene as recently as last week as they looked like the one team that would be left out of the "Boston Slam."

The Celtics' immediate hopes for another championship also hit a snag this past weekend when the rival Lakers landed Anthony Davis after years of speculation that Davis was the apple of Danny Ainge's eye.

The plan now seems to be centered on building around Jayson Tatum and Jaylen Brown. That's not sexy, but it may very well have the Celtics in the mix next season.

The drastically changing landscape of the NBA could actually help the Celtics this summer even if they don't land any big fish (which right now looks improbable).

Kawhi Leonard could very well bolt the Raptors to become the face of the Clippers, and getting Leonard out of the East would be huge for the C's.

The Celtics as presently constructed (sans Kyrie Irving, of course) could still beat the Philadelphia 76ers in a seven-game series.

Toppling the Bucks will obviously be difficult as Milwaukee dismissed the C's rather easily in five games this past season. But if Ainge can add a shooter and/or a rim protector this summer; if Tatum and Brown improve significantly; and if Brad Stevens is able to solve the Celtics' chemistry issues, this team should be able to put more than a scare into the Bucks.

3. Red Sox

This just doesn't have the feel of a World Series year, does it?

Last year at this time the Sox were on a record regular-season pace and ultimately came through in the playoffs. In their previous championship year (2013), they won 97 games.

Just to get to 90 wins this season, the Sox would have to go 51-38 the rest of the way. Not impossible, but it just doesn't seem likely at this juncture.

So maybe the Sox don't win it all this year. Fortunately, they still have the pieces to contend for well into the next decade. And if Mookie Betts is to flee via free agency? Well, the Sox will still have the deep pockets to go out and sign or trade for whatever big fish is on the market at that time.

4. Bruins

A deep Stanley Cup playoff run is the most taxing thing you can do in professional team sports. You rarely see teams that lose in the Cup Final make a return trip the next year. The loss after such a lengthy journey is simply crushing as only one team since 1983 has bounced back to make another trip to the championship round (2008-09 Pittsburgh Penguins).

The B's do have a nice young base as David Pastrnak is just 22 years old, Charlie McAvoy is just 21, and Brandon Carlo and Jake DeBrusk are both 22. Another Cup run should be in the cards at some point, but with playoff hockey being so unpredictable, don't bank on it in the next few years.

Mookie Betts and Julian Edelman celebrate at Fenway Park this past April.

Aries Knowledge you have accumulated will help you maneuver into a position that will give you more power or responsibility. Be sure it's what you want before you accept. Romance is highlighted.

Taurus An incident will stir up emotions. Consider what you want to happen and look for a practical way to get what you want. Put a proposal together and schedule meetings.

Gemini Trust what you see, not what you hear. Take a step back if someone wants you to take on an expensive habit or get involved in something you cannot afford.

Cancer If you look for change, you'll find something that suits your needs. Greater involvement in making the rules will help you control a situation that could affect your community.

Leo Stop worrying about what others do or say, and concentrate on what you want to achieve. Alter your life for the right reasons, not because someone else is pressuring you.

Virgo You can be a leader, a follower or simply do your own thing. You have a choice, and it's up to you to step up and do what's in your best interest.

Libra If you research your family history, you will discover surprising information that will alter your beliefs and the choices you make.

Scorpio Jump at a chance to head in a different direction. Whether it's a geographical, vocational or personal change, let your intuition guide you. Satisfy your curiosity.

Sagittarius Keep a low profile and a sharp watch. Someone you least expect will misrepresent you or create a dilemma that will make you look bad. Don't give anyone reason to talk about you.

Capricorn You can win points if you are willing to meet someone halfway about some of the changes taking place at home or in your personal life.

Aquarius Look for modest opportunities. It doesn't matter how good a deal sounds; if it doesn't fit your lifestyle or budget, it isn't going to be worthwhile.
